

RASA Consulting, the Company That Supported 7 Alliant 2 Winners, Announces a New Service to Support Alliant Task Order Business Development

Market identification for new, large IDIQs, like Alliant 2, is a difficult task for unlimited and small awardees alike. However, using the same tools that were used to make its clients successful in winning awards on the new Alliant 2 contract, RASA Consulting is excited to announce its new task order research service to help companies understand the task order opportunities that will soon be up for renewal or re compete from Alliant 1.

Using the Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS) and other public data sources, RASA and its partner have helped companies win places on VETS, OASIS, and, now, Alliant 2 through custom analytics-driven research and data mining of all awarded task orders under these programs.

Over 200 task orders will be coming up for renewal or re compete in the next 24 months and RASA can provide the data to enable your business development team to focus on the ones that are from the correct NAICS codes, product service codes, and other data segmentations that may be appropriate for your company.

Additionally, RASA analyzes these upcoming recompetes by scope of work and key competitors, and then breaks them down by agency and bureau, with information on government contacts, incumbent contacts, revenue, and more.

The competitive analysis features of this service are an analysis of the incumbent information, whether they won a position on Alliant 2, the incumbent's period of performance, the incumbent's standing in the agency, revenue by period, and expiration of the current task order.

These studies are available as comprehensive, customized studies or as a quarterly broad brush on upcoming task orders to be re competed, the NAICS codes, product service codes, revenue potential, and key dates.

Contact us for a quote on the study that fits your requirements. We are the company that supported seven winners in these two programs and we will continue to do the detailed work that has made our clients winners on the task order competitions.
